Mousedeer are found widely in Southeast Asia. They live in lowland forests. Their diet consists of green shoots, fallen fruits, buds and sometimes wild mushrooms.

In Malay folk tales, the mousedeer is shown as a clever creature. In one story, the mousedeer or Sang Kancil could not cross a river to get to the fruits on the other side. It tricked the crocodiles by telling them that the king of the jungle wanted him to count them. The crocodiles lined up across the width of the river.
